The Winter War, as it came to be known, lasted for three months and ended with a peace treaty that ceded some Finnish territory to the Soviet Union. But the Finns had shown the world that they were not to be trifled with.

In 1941, Germany invaded the Soviet Union and Finland joined the Axis powers in the hope of regaining the territory it had lost in the Winter War. The Finns fought alongside the Germans until 1944, when they switched sides and joined the Allies.

The Continuation War, as it is known, ended in 1945 with Finland regaining all of the territory it had lost in the Winter War. Finland was the only country that fought on both sides of World War II and emerged from the war with its independence intact.
