The Renaissance

The Renaissance was a period of great cultural and intellectual change in Europe. It began in the 14th century and lasted until the 16th century.

During this time, there was a renewed interest in classical learning and art. This interest led to a new style of furniture that was inspired by ancient Greek and Roman designs.

Renaissance furniture was typically made of wood, and it was often decorated with carvings, paintings, and gilding. The most popular pieces of furniture during this period included chairs, tables, beds, and chests.

The Baroque

The Baroque period followed the Renaissance period. It began in the 17th century and lasted until the 18th century. During this time, there was a new emphasis on grandeur and opulence. This opulence was reflected in the furniture of the period.

Baroque furniture was typically made of expensive materials, such as mahogany, walnut, and rosewood. It was often decorated with elaborate carvings, gilding, and upholstery. The most popular pieces of furniture during this period included chairs, sofas, tables, and beds.

The Treatise on the Furniture

In 1763, a book was published that would have a profound impact on the history of furniture making. This book was called the "Treatise on the Furniture" by André-Jacob Roubo.

The "Treatise on the Furniture" was a comprehensive guide to the art of furniture making. It covered everything from the selection of wood to the finishing of the piece. The book was illustrated with over 200 plates, which showed the different steps involved in making furniture.

The "Treatise on the Furniture" was a major influence on furniture makers for centuries. It helped to standardize the techniques of furniture making, and it also helped to spread new ideas about furniture design.

The Legacy of the Renaissance and Baroque

The furniture of the Renaissance and Baroque periods has had a lasting impact on the way we live today. Many of the designs that were popular during these periods are still used today.
