About the Book

Process and Reality is a major work of 20th-century philosophy. In it, Whitehead develops a new metaphysical system that he calls "process philosophy." Process philosophy is based on the idea that the world is not made up of static objects, but rather of dynamic processes. These processes are constantly changing and interacting, and they give rise to the world that we experience.

Whitehead's process philosophy is a complex and challenging system of thought. However, it is also a deeply rewarding one. By understanding Whitehead's key terms and concepts, readers can gain a new understanding of the world around them.
