The Haida People

The colonizers brought with them diseases, alcohol, and violence. They also took control of much of the Haida's traditional lands. As a result, the Haida people suffered greatly. Their population declined, their culture was suppressed, and their way of life was nearly destroyed.

The Gwaii Haanas National Park Reserve and Haida Heritage Site

In the 1980s, the Haida people began to fight for the return of their traditional lands. They argued that they had never surrendered their lands to the Canadian government, and that they had a right to self-determination. After years of negotiations, the Canadian government agreed to establish the Gwaii Haanas National Park Reserve and Haida Heritage Site in 1988.

The Gwaii Haanas National Park Reserve is a protected area that includes over 140 islands and 1.5 million hectares of land and sea. It is home to a diverse range of plants and animals, including grizzly bears, bald eagles, and sea otters. The Haida Heritage Site is a cultural area that includes several important Haida villages and archaeological sites.

The establishment of the Gwaii Haanas National Park Reserve and Haida Heritage Site was a major victory for the Haida people. It gave them back control over their traditional lands and allowed them to begin to rebuild their culture and way of life.

The Haida Gwaii Lesson is a story of hope and reconciliation. It shows that even after centuries of oppression, it is possible to heal the wounds of the past and build a better future. The Haida people have shown the world that it is possible to live in harmony with the land and with each other.
